That evening, when both his parents went hunting, Plop closed his eyes and tried to remember something to remember. Suddenly he heard a happy shout and Plop forgot about being afraid of the dark. He peered through the leaves and saw a boy sitting by a fire. Plop flew down, landing with an enormous thud.

"Hello!" said Plop. "I've come to see what's going on."

"I'm guarding the camp-fire," said the boy. "The others have gone to play games in the dark, lucky things."

"Do you like the dark?" asked Plop.

"It's super!" the boy replied. "DARK IS FUN. We're going to make cocoa and sing around the fire. Would you like to stay?"
